FULLERS OF NEW ENGLAND.

John Fuller In the Mayflower came Edward Fuller, and Dr. Samuel Fuller. Edward died in the great mortality, 1621, leaving only son Samuel, who settled on the Cape. Dr. Samuel Fuller died in 1633, leaving an only son Samuel, who became minister of Middleboro', and died there in 1695, aged 71.

1. JOHN FULLER, supposed to have come with J. Winthrop, Jr. in the Abigail, Uackwell, master, in 1635, was born in England in 1620.* He settled in Cambridge village (now Newton), in 1644. In Dec., 1653, he purchased of Joseph Cooke, of Cambridge, 750 acres of land in the Northwest part of Newton, for 160 pounds sterling. It was bounded North and West by Charles river, East by land of Thomas Park, and South by S. Shepard's farm. His house stood on the South side of the road, and West side of the brook, within a few rods of both. By subsequent purchases he increased his tract to upwards of 1000 acres. Edward Jackson and John Fuller were the largest land-holders in the town. Cheese-cake brook ran through this tract, which was long known as the "Fuller Farm." He divided it among his five sons by will (son Isaac having died in 1691), with the proviso that they should not sell to any stranger, until they or their next relative should have the offer of it. Twenty-two of John Fuller's descendants were in the army of the Revolution, from Newton.†

The following document, apparently in John Fuller's handwriting, is in the possession of a descendant:

"Wee whose names are subscribed are able to give this their testimony that when the land was sold to Ensign John Spring

3. JONATHAN FULLER, son of John, born 1618; married Mindwell Trowbridge, no issue; by will he bequeathed his estate to Jonathan, son of his brother Joseph. He was selectman in Newton. Died August 12, 1722, aged 77. Widow died 1738, aged 96.

5. JOSEPH FULLER, third son of John, known as Captain Joseph Fuller, born 1652; married Dec. 13, 1680, Lydia, daughter of Edward Jackson, of Newton. His father-in-law* gave him 20 acres of land from the West end of the Mayhew farm of 500 acres which he bought of Gov. Simon Bradstreet, in 1648, for £140—which Bradstreet bought of Thomas Mayhew, of Watertown, in 1638, with the buildings, for six cows.

This tract commenced near what is now the division line between Newton and Brighton, and extended Westward, including what is now Newtonville, and covering the site of General Hull's place, now owned by Governor Claflin. Here Joseph Fuller built his house, and this 20 acres, together with about 200 inherited from his father, formed the farm which descended to his son Joseph, his grandson Abraham, and his great-granddaughter Sarah, who married William Hull. In 1814, William Hull built a new house on the same spot where Joseph Fuller's stood for one hundred and thirty years. The house built by General Hull was, after the death of his widow and the sale of the estate, removed to the railroad station called "Hull's crossing," to make room for the house built by Governor Claflin, who bought the property, and who is the third of that title who has owned it—Governor Bradstreet, Governor Hull, and Governor Claflin. The large elm tree still standing near the house, was, according to a family tradition, a riding switch planted by Joseph

73. ABRAHAM FULLER, son of Joseph 2d born 1720. During his father's lifetime he kept a private grammar-school in Newton, and was also Town Clerk and Treasurer, for twenty-seven years, commencing in 1763. He was a Selectman four years; Representative to the General Court, eighteen years; Delegate to the Provincial Congress; a Senator, Councillor and

Judge of the Court of Common Pleas for Middlesex County. He was also chosen Major of the first Middlesex Regiment, in 1771.

After his father's death, in 1766, he removed to the house built by his grandfather, Capt. Joseph Fuller, and carried on the farm, adding to it the business of a maltster. At that period, when beer was the usual beverage, and was drunk at all meals, the trade in malt was a very important one; and it is related of Judge Fuller, that at one time, there being a scarcity of malt, it happened that he was the only holder of it in the town. So far from taking advantage of this, he continued to sell at the old prices, and would only allow each purchaser to have a limited quantity, lest the poor should be deprived of their beer. The old malt house where the business was carried on was standing as lately as 1825, and was occupied for lodging rooms by the farm laborers employed by General Hull.

These men had a story that the old Judge used to walk there, in his white wig, twenty years after his death. Judge Fuller was a very earnest patriot before the Revolution, and it is told that previous to the fight at Concord, fearing that the British might destroy the County Records at that place, he rode over from Newton the day before the fight, and carried away the most valuable of the papers in his saddlebags to his house in Newton.* In 1777, when about £3000 were raised in the town to pay the Newton soldiers, Judge Fuller subscribed £286 of the amount, there being only one larger subscription, that of Elnathan Winchester. In 1775, the older men of the town who were past active service, were enrolled into a company which was called the Alarm List. In this was Abraham Fuller. Three companies of Newton men, two hundred and eighteen in all, were engaged in the affair of the 19th of April.

Judge Fuller was a member of the convention which assembled in Boston, January, 1788, to ratify the Constitution of the United States, and took part in the debates. He asked this question of Elbridge Gerry, who was present to answer "questions of fact."

"Why, in the last requisition of Congress, the portion of taxes

* "To him were committed, as one of the Provincial Congress at Concord, the papers containing the exact returns of the Military Stores of Massachusetts in 1775. For want of room in the cabinet where they had been kept, and carried them to his house in Newton on the day before the attack on Concord, April 19, 1775. The British soldiers when they entered the town searched for these papers, and on finding great disappointment at missing them."—HOMER'S History of Boston.

required of this State was thirteen times as much as of Georgia, and yet we have but eight Representatives in the general government, and Georgia has three? Until this question was answered, he was at a loss to know how taxation and representation went hand in hand."

It was voted that this question be asked of Mr. Gerry. A long and desultory debate ensued on the manner in which the answer should be given. It was finally voted that Mr. Gerry should reduce his answer to writing.

(Saturday, Jan. 19th.) Mr. Gerry's answer to Mr. Fuller's question was read. The purport was, that Georgia had increased in its number by immigration—and if it had not then, would soon be entitled to the proportion assigned her. Which seems rather a feeble reply, but it sufficed, for the Constitution was adopted in Massachusetts by a vote of 187 to 168—Judge Fuller voting aye.

By his will, July, 1793, he left £300 "for the purpose of laying the foundation of an Academy in Newton." The building was erected in the West Parish, and was used for an Academy for some years. Afterwards it was sold by the town to the Mess. Allen, who occupy it as a private school for boys.

Judge Fuller was a man of great integrity and justice; somewhat stern in aspect and manner, as became one who had been many years a teacher of youth, a Judge and a Senator. Of large, portly person, and a voice so powerful, that it is said he could be distinctly heard calling to his workmen from his farm to Anzier's corner, a mile distant. Once, when the small-pox prevailed in his vicinity, he agreed with Dr. Marshall Spring, of Watertown, to call out to him the news from the top of Chestnut Hill on his farm. He went and shouted "All's well!" and Dr. Spring heard him at Watertown. He was very averse to owing even the smallest sum of money; and it is related, that when, on his death bed, seeming uneasy, his wife asked what troubled him, he replied, "I owe Ludy Harris ninepence for mending my shoe; send over and pay the money; I have never lived in debt, and I cannot die in debt." So the ninepence was paid, and the Judge departed in peace.

He had intended to have been buried on his farm; but it occurred to him, that notwithstanding the precautions of John Fuller, his ancestor, to keep the place in the family, it might be sold by his descendants: "I never was bought nor sold when alive, and I won't be sold after I die," said he, and so was buried in the family tomb in the cemetery at Newton Center.

When this tomb was opened nine years afterwards, to admit the body of his wife, it was found that the body of Judge Fuller was in a remarkable state of preservation, being converted into a substance as hard as wood, but retaining the features so well that he would have been recognized by any person who had known him in life. The body remained in this condition for many years, and was visited by the scientific and the curious, until their visits became an annoyance to the family, when the tomb was closed by a marble door. Twenty-five years after burial, the body remained nearly perfect in form, though the coffin had mouldered away, so that it became necessary to replace it with a new one. Whatever the preserving influence was (and it has never been explained), it has ceased to act, for at a recent visit (1866) the coffin was opened, and nothing found in it excepting the bones.

Abraham Fuller married, in 1758, Sarah Dyer, of Weymouth, he being then thirty-eight years of age, and she thirty-one.

He died April 20, 1794, aged 74 years.

She died April 7, 1803, aged 76 years.
